Students raise money, 'sweat' for vets

Approximately 52 participants raised $1,152 during "Sweat for a Vet" at CSULB on Saturday.

He came to spin at "Sweat for a Vet" not just to get a great workout or support a great cause, but to honor his family.

"I come from a long line of military service men on both sides of my family," said Abe Leal, a vocational student at Cal State Long Beach. "Just yesterday I took my granddad out for breakfast for Veterans Day."

The Student Recreation and Wellness Center raised $1,152 for the cardio fundraiser "Sweat for a Vet" on Saturday. The national campaign, sponsored by Project VisAbility, raised more than $10,000 for disabled veterans.

According to Maureen MacRae, fitness coordinator for the SRWC, 52 participants worked out on the spin bikes, krank cycles and rowing machines from 6:30 to 9:30 on Saturday morning.

"We had a great turnout from the fitness majors here on campus," MacRae said.

Instructors at the main workout at the Tysons Sport and Health club in Mclean, Va. kept the mood upbeat with pop music and inspirational words via a live video link.

Ayla Donlin, kinesiology lecturer and spin teacher at CSULB, led the workout from Virginia for Women's soccer earns first-ever NCAA Tournament win with Link's record-tying goal.

MALIBU — Long Beach State women's soccer star Nadia Link couldn't have picked a better time to etch her name into the 49er history books — the first round of the NCAA Tournament.

The junior forward's record-tying 16th goal of the season gave the No. 24-ranked 49ers their first-ever NCAA Tournament win in three appearances with a 1-0 overtime victory over No. 3-seeded Pepperdine on Saturday at Rokus Field.

"I didn't even know until head coach [Mauricio Ingrassia] told me," Link said of tying Annette Fernandez's 1984 single-season record for goals. "It's always a great honor, but I feel it means so much more than that. This goal was a big stepping-stone for the program and the alumni. For that goal to signify us getting into the next round, it's a big deal for all of us."

The victory marked the first time the 'Niners (16-5-1) have ever scored in the 64-team tournament and defeated a top 10-ranked opponent. It was also first home loss of the season for the No. 7 Waves (15-2-4), who entered the contest with a 21-match winning streak at Rokus Field.

Occupy Long Beach faces safety issues, conflict

Issues are arising due to conflicting backgrounds, integration of homeless people.

By Julianne De Caro
Staff Writer

A fight broke out — well, almost.

Two men shouted at each other, and then suddenly, one of them was on the ground while the other proceeded to kick his leg towards him, as if to strike him.

Shortly, a Long Beach Police Department car pulled up and beeped its siren, signaling for them to break it up. The two guys stopped and the car drove off.

But it didn't end there.

The younger male, dressed in head-to-toe black, wasn't quite through. He turned toward the other man, and laughed as he proceeded to tell him that he would cut him and slice him like a tomato if he ever messed with him again.

Instances like these may be common in downtown's Lincoln Park, where the city's homeless community congregates.

The park has also been the campground for the activist group Occupy Long Beach since Oct. 15.

Occupy Long Beach aims to give everyone a voice and doesn't turn anyone away who wants to join and become a member, including the homeless.

However, after two fatal shootings that occurred at an Occupy demonstration, one in Burlington and the other in Oakland, plus several sexual assaults at various encampments — the risks of the movements are starting to ware on the participants.

"There was a lot of fear. A lot of people that said they didn't feel safe," said Jay Matthew, Occupy Long Beach committee member.

Matthew said that some members

Bad weather limits Homecoming, basketball game keeps 'spirit' alive

Homecoming tailgate, pre-game activities canceled because of the expectation of rain.

By Leslie Campos
Staff Writer

Saturday's weather forecast predicted rain, and although many Homecoming activities were canceled due to it, the Long Beach State men's basketball team still managed to win their first game of the season at the Walter Pyramid.

A number of interactive activities like jousting, wax hands, a mechanical bull, a cover band, photo booths and free food were canceled because of the likelihood of rain, according to Kasey Schoen, Associated Students Inc.'s Chief Programming Officer.

Instead, there was only a voting booth, where students could cast their vote for their favorite homecoming court candidate.

"We put all our time and efforts into the student tailgate, and it's really sad that we canceled it due to the expectation of rain," Schoen said. "We focused on the student tailgate instead of a pep rally."

This year, ASI was expecting the activities and free food at the student tailgate to be reason enough for students to attend the 11 a.m. Homecoming tailgate.

Some students say that without the Homecoming pep rally they didn't know CSULB had a Homecoming.

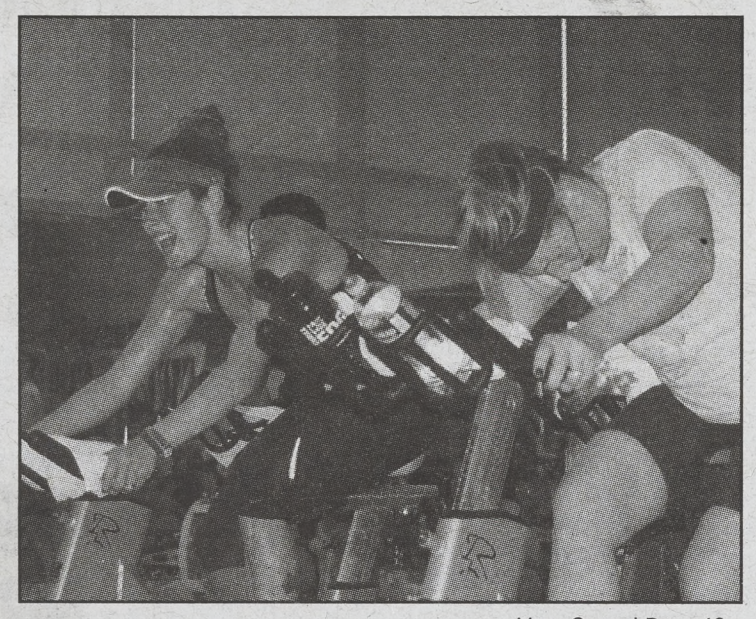

"I love basketball, so I'm pumped, but the only reason I heard about it was because of my suitemate," Devan Richard, a freshman political science major said. "It wasn't as spirited as I thought it would be."

The Athletics Marketing department organized an interactive lounge for students to experience before the game. The lounge featured free airbrush tattoo booths, hand drawn caricatures, slices of pizza and Redbull. Students were able to turn in their Monson Maniacs application to get a maniac shirt.

Though the plans for the first game of the season were not executed as planned, the lack of student related activities did not take away from the nature of the game. The Monson Maniacs student section went up in excitement and a high spirit atmosphere in support of the men's basketball team.

There was also an alumni presence at the game.

"We want them to come on home, if the alumni choose to come back to campus they should come back for Homecoming," said Janice Hatanaka, associated vice president of Alumni Relations. "We also want the alumni to watch the game and support our students."

the first hour of "Sweat for a Vet." Donlin gave a special shout out to participants at the SRWC about 25 minutes into the workout.

"You know what it's time for?" Donlin said. "To give a shout out to my peeps at CSULB. On three, 'Go Beach!'"

Each participant received a raffle ticket. During the three hours of the fundraiser, the SRWC gave away 12 raffle prizes including SRWC water bottles, "Sweat for a Vet" t-shirts, Nike backpacks and fitness major books.

The SRWC experienced some technical difficulties with the live video, but it was expected, according to MacRae. When the video froze, instructors at the SRWC led the workout.

Marci Acevedo, a senior nutrition major and spin teacher at the SRWC, came to the event because she said she wanted to support the veterans in her life.

"I'm really good friends with the spin teacher who coordinated it, which is Ayla Donlin. And I love her," Acevedo said. "And I really like the cause too because I know a lot of people who were in the army or the marines... plus I love spin, so why not?"

MacRae said the event was "hugely successful." She went on to say that nearly every piece of equipment was being used for the first two hours and they raised more money than expected.

"We plan on having this as an annual event here at the SRWC," MacRae said. "It's a great cause and all the participants seemed to really enjoy the event."

Part of the money that was raised at CSULB will be used to buy a krank cycle for the SRWC.

said they left the park due the homeless people. But Matthew believes the issue ran deeper.

When you bring people together from different backgrounds and different walks of life, it's understandable for there to be issues, Matthew said.

"It's like religion," Matthew said. "Religion's fine in a bubble, but once it meets another religion, there tends to be a clash."

Matthew said that things are better now and the members have since regrouped for general assembly meetings, but in a new location.

They are now holding their meetings in front of city hall, which he feels is more symbolic.

Matthew said that the group has had a pretty consistent number of people and has plans to expand further.

"I think the most we had here was 86 people camped around," Matthew said. "And now that we extended to that corner, it's just going to get bigger."

While the group has visions of growing, the threat of being shut down by police due to incidences at other Occupy camps is a growing concern.

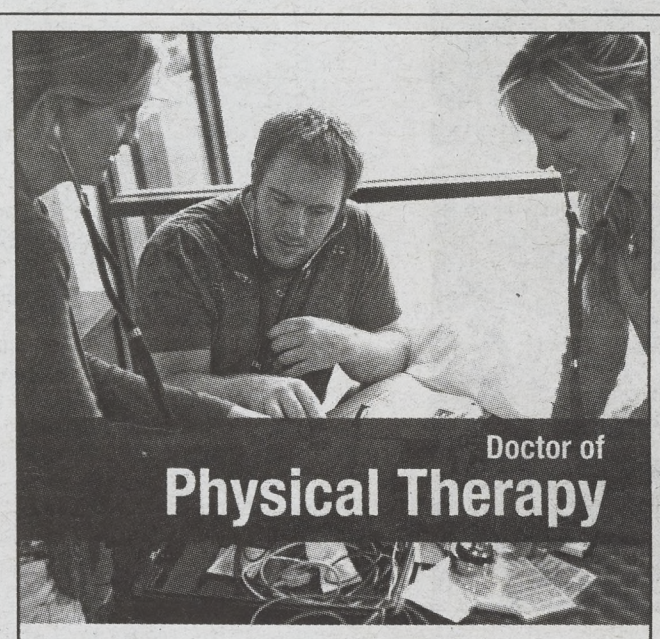

According to Occupy Long Beach committee member Micaela Salatino, there's little that the group can do other than keep a close eye and act as peacekeepers to diffuse problems when they arise.

"Some people step up and try to break it up and that's really all we can do," Salatino said. "We can't tell anyone you can't be here."

Salatino slept at the park during the first two nights of the encampment, but now stays only during the day.

"The police circle around a lot," Salatino said. "I guess in a way if something happened, the police department is right here."

Penn State coaches should face punishment

The firing of Penn State coach Joe Paterno has been in the news recently due to reports that long-time assistant Jerry Sandusky has abused 8 young boys over a 15-year span. Even worse, some of these incidents could have been avoided if the information was released earlier.

Our View

Back in 2002, a graduate assistant discovered Sandusky in the campus locker room raping a young boy in the showers. He informed Paterno about the abuse, who then told the Athletic Director. It is not until now that this information was made available to the authorities.

It is disgusting that this information was not released immediately, and all of the people involved are guilty and partially responsible for every victim who was abused since 2002. It is true that they informed their bosses about the incident, but as soon as they noticed that the police were not involved, something should have been said.

The graduate assistant who witnessed the abuse should have done more to stop what was happening than just telling Paterno. It is impossible to imagine witnessing such a thing, and the fact that the police weren't called immediately should be considered a crime.

Losing their jobs is not enough. Paterno and everyone else who helped to keep this information secret deserve to be punished to the full extent of the law. If they would have told the authorities as soon as it happened, it would have prevented future incidents.

A new law needs to be passed in Pennsylvania to prevent things like this from happening. After the incident, Pennsylvania Governor Tom Corbett stated that the child protection laws in the state are flawed and need to be changed.

Currently, the law in Pennsylvania says that if any incidents of child abuse are witnessed, the person who saw it is required to notify the person in charge. The person in charge is then responsible for dealing with the situation.

This law needs to be changed to make sure that law enforcement is informed immediately in situations like this. It is not enough to simply tell your boss that this is going on. You can't pass the responsibility to somebody else when something like this happens, they should have taken action.

The fact that football is so important in Pennsylvania that they put it above the safety of children is despicable, and hopefully this is a wake-up call that winning isn't everything. Paterno had the most victories of any college football coach in history, but at what cost? The school did the right thing by firing him.

Penn State worshipped Joe Paterno. The people defending him even after all of this are misguided by their love of the sport. Everyone should put themselves into the shoes of the parents of the children who were abused by this man. The fact that this could have been prevented is heartbreaking. Hopefully the law will be changed and preventative measures will be put into place to protect children in the future.

When science and technology meet reality, human race benefits

Gerry Wachovsky

One of the most exciting things about living in this current day and age is our continuous technological advances and proficiency with science. In everything from medicine to travel, it is inarguable that things are definitely much more convenient for us than our predecessors of yesteryear had it.

Recently a friend turned me on to a developing field called "Evacuated Tube Transport Technology," or ET3 for short, and while the technology itself seems sound, it does raise many logistical questions. Even still, technological advances like ET3 and the possibility of being able to enjoy such luxury in the future is a thrilling concept.

So what is ET3, exactly? Well, in short, it is a vacuum tube that transports people from one location to another quickly and efficiently. Operating much like a train, ET3 is purported to cost less, be faster, and be much more forgiving on the environment, seeing as how the train uses air to propel itself. Certain estimates, according to ET3.com, claim the ability of the train to travel 400 miles-per-hour in the United States and 4,000 miles-per-hour internationally, meaning one could theoretically get from New York City to Beijing in around two hours.

The train would be able to travel both above ground on a type of rail system and even amazingly, beneath the ocean. The thought of being stuck in a tube going 4,000 miles-per-hour underwater is definitely a sobering one.

But as with all burgeoning technology there are questions, and many of the questions make it seem like this type of rail system is much more than ten years or so off. For one, wouldn't the above-land track make for a perfect terrorist target? Across the 3,000 miles of land that the United States covers, there would have to be at least some areas of the track that aren't under tight security, right? ET3 answers this question by saying basically that "stuff happens," and that they will cross that bridge when it comes, but it is a possibility worth exploring.

One of the more humorous questions posed on the web site is "what if the brakes fail?" Imagine, for a moment, travelling at a speed of over 2,000 miles-per-hour and having either the brakes cut, leaving you hurtling across the planet in essentially an out-of-control bullet, or imagine if the brakes engaged all at once, instantly derailing the train and turning all the passengers inside into mush. That is another sobering thought, right?

All kidding aside, the train will have sets of redundant braking systems, meaning even if numerous ones fail, the train would still be able to slow down properly. All in all, it seems like a pretty cool system that could bring us closer to that "Jetsons" feel of the future.

But why am I writing my weekly column, which is usually politically charged, about this developing field of science?

Much like stem-cell research, climate-change study, and other areas of science, this kind of research is necessary to our survival as a species. With the seven-billionth person recently being born in the world, we as humans are going to need ways to sustain life when the planet cannot support us any longer. There are, obviously, way too many people on the planet already, but thanks to science and innovators, at least the future doesn't look completely bleak.

People aren't going to stop having unprotected sex before they are ready for children and subsequently, the earth will continue to be littered with more bastards and illegitimate progeny.

However, the same people who don't believe science is necessary and believe that it is an affront to religion still benefit from such technological abundance. Look at it whichever way you want, but one thing is certain — the future is now, and I, for one, am excited to see where it goes.

Childish Gambino proves music, acting superstardom

By Matt Grippi
Staff Writer

Rapper Childish Gambino was once considered a side-project for the already-successful writer, actor and comedian Donald Glover, best known at Troy on NBC's "Community." On Saturday night at his concert at Club Nokia in Los Angeles, he proved that he is taking this rapping thing very seriously.

Previously, all of Childish Gambino's music was offered for free through his website, but this year, he releases his first studio album, "Camp," in stores tomorrow. In order to promote the album, he and his band did a series of shows throughout the country, ending with one final show on Saturday. He and his band played almost the entire new album and some songs off his previous free releases.

One of the unique things about Childish Gambino's show is the full live band that he uses. Ludwig Göransson, composer for "Community" and producer of the album plays guitar and keyboard for the band. Unlike other rap groups, Childish Gambino uses almost no samples. All the beats are produced live, which makes the show even more engaging.

At one point during the show he brought out an entire choir and performed the first track off of "Camp," entitled "Outside." The use of the choir in this song was reminiscent of Kanye West, and makes for a perfect intro for the album. He also performed a cover version of Kanye's single "All of the Lights," which was a highlight of the show.

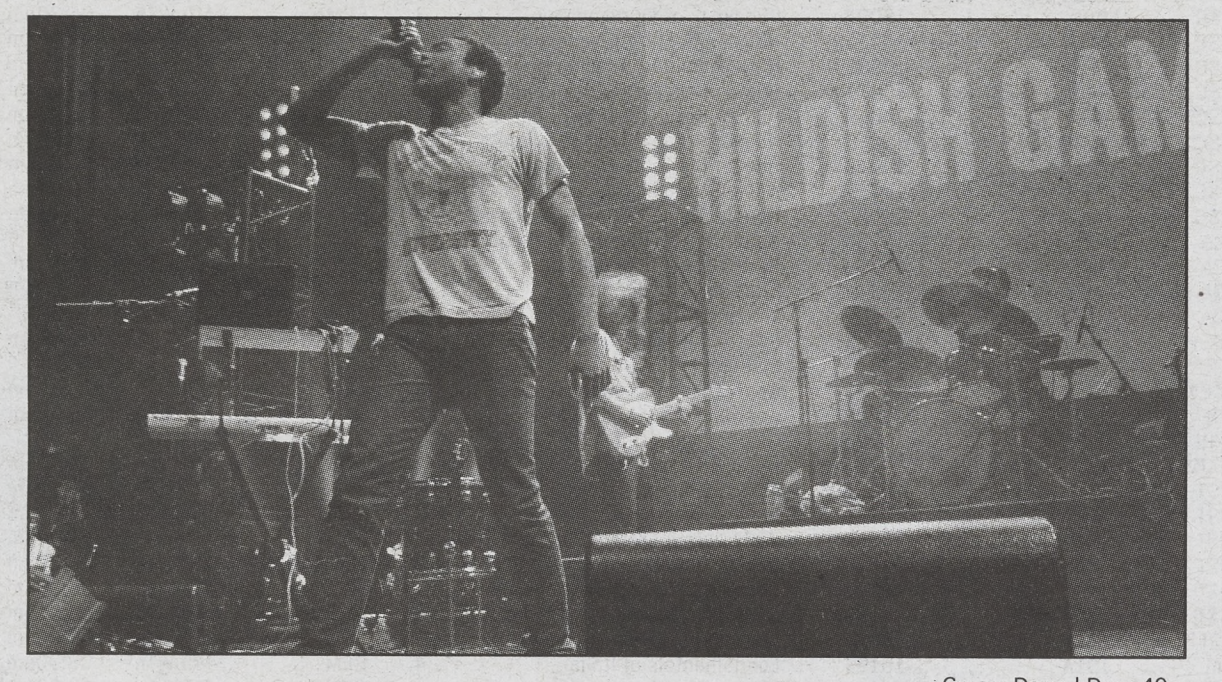

Glover's acting background is evident when watching him on stage. He uses fierce, expressive facial expressions while making eye contact with the audience. It is refreshing to see an artist who so obviously loves what he is doing. Donald Glover was doing fine as an actor and writer, but he also is committed and passionate about his music and it shows.

It was surprising how many people in the audience were singing along to his music, both old and new. "Camp" hasn't been released yet, but it is available to stream for free on NPR.com. If the album is already this popular before it's available in stores, it will be interesting to see how popular it is once it's released.

The new album is fantastic and proves that Gambino is here to stay. Between lightning-fast puns and references, he weaves in stories about the trials and tribulations of fame and what it is like to live with his kind of success. Glover proves that you don't have to follow the same format as everybody else in this industry, and that rap is a medium that is still open for creativity.

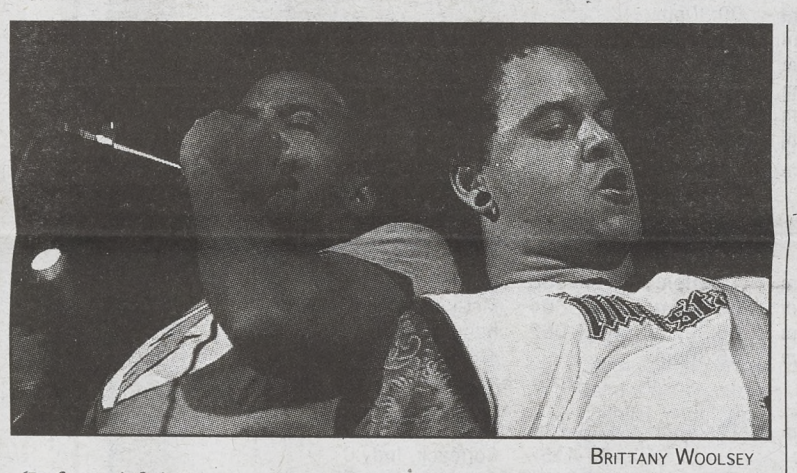

The album may not be a comedy act, but it is still bound to make you smile if you understand some of the genius lyrics in his songs. Listeners would benefit from having Urban Dictionary pulled up on their computer while listening to the album if they are hoping to understand everything. Brilliant tracks like "You See Me" demand to be listened to multiple times, especially when he starts spitting rhymes at machine-gun speed.

Donald Glover might have trouble balancing his acting career with his music career if this album takes off. Childish Gambino has earned the right to be taken seriously, and he shows no signs of stopping. "Camp" is available in stores and online tomorrow.

Far From Fate plays for fans

Despite conflicting circumstances, two of the members performed an acoustic set at the Blue Café on Saturday.

By Sara Ehlers
Staff Writer

With two acoustic guitars and only half of the band, Fullerton rockers, Far From Fate, lit up the stage with unplugged versions of their songs for their last show of the year at the Blue Café on Saturday.

The entire set had a very mellow and soothing vibe to it with Bobby Huitt's light guitar acoustics and Steevun Houston's vocals. Houston and Huitt were the only two members of the band who were able to make it to their last show, due to conflicting circumstances for the other members, Armando Alfaro (bass) and Andy Coles (guitar). The band is currently searching for a new drummer.

Some of the songs played throughout the night included "Insecure," "Pit of Passion" and "Below the Fall." The members were able to change their songs around to just vocals and acoustics for the night, apart from their normal post-hardcore sound with screaming, bass and drums backing their sound.

Their sound is very unique and has its own style to it.

"'Pop-core' is what I like to call it," Huitt said. "I don't know if that is a genre or I just made it up. There's post hardcore, there's metal, there's pop, there's pop-punk, so it's like, yeah, we're sort of like A Day to Remember in that we have heavy breakdowns and [Houston] screams sometimes."

Their "pop-core" style is what makes their band have such a loyal fanbase all around Southern California.

For their last show of the year, the turnout of their fans was promising. Even though the band almost did not make it to the show, Far From Fate still came through.

"Basically we came out [because] we're doing it for the fans," Huitt said. "We didn't want to cancel the show. We thought it would be in bad taste, a day or two days before to cancel the show."

"We're very schedule-oriented," Houston added. "When you have absolutely nothing to do because you made plans for the show already, why not follow through?"

As a band of three years, Far From Fate has come a long way and continues to make progress.

"[After] our last show of the year, then we go into recording for December," Houston said. "We want to hit the new year with our tour dates, we're going to try to tour California and maybe even a little bit out to Arizona."

LBSU basketball strikes twice in season-openers

By Devin Ugland & Zien Halwani
Staff Writers

Men's basketball

Senior point guard Casper Ware came alive in the second half, and a balanced scoring attack helped lead the senior-laden Long Beach State men's basketball team to a 69-61 victory over Idaho on Homecoming afternoon Saturday.

The 49ers' (1-0) four seniors scored in double figures, while freshman guard Mike Caffey contributed 25 solid minutes off the bench against Idaho (0-1).

Ware, who struggled in the first half, scoring just five points on 2 of 7 shooting, came up huge after halftime, scoring 15 of his game-high 20 points. He had a solid night from the field, going 7 of 17 and 3 of 9 from behind the arc. He also pitched in four assists and two steals.

"I missed a couple shots [early] and I felt like I didn't have to force anything," he said. "We've got a lot of players that can score."

After a Ware three-pointer gave The Beach a 66-59 lead with just under three minutes remaining, they never looked back.

Senior forward Larry Anderson had a great shooting performance, going a perfect 4 of 4 from the field for 16 points on the night. Senior forward T.J. Robinson recorded a double-double for The Beach with 10 points and 11 rebounds. Senior forward Eugene Phelps added 11 points and six rebounds, while freshman guard Mike Caffey came off the bench scoring six points on 3 of 6 shooting.

LBSU will return to action at No. 11-ranked Pittsburgh on Wednesday at 6 p.m. (PT). The game will be televised on ESPNU.

Women's basketball

A stifling full-court zone defense was too much for Utah Valley to handle Friday night as the Long Beach State women's basketball team cruised to its largest margin of victory since 2006.

The 49ers shot 39.7 percent from the field, scored 31 points off turnovers and collected 19 steals en route to a 75-43 victory over the Wolverines in both teams' season opener at the Walter Pyramid.

The 'Niners (1-1) held UV (0-1) to a dismal 22.6 percent shooting and forced a whopping 30 turnovers.

Sophomore forward Ella Clark led all scorers with 16 points, a career-high seven blocks and eight rebounds.

Senior forward and co-captain Tipesa Moorer added a double-double with 13 points and 11 boards.

"[It was] a total team effort tonight," 49ers head coach Jody Wynn said. "We needed this; We needed this for our confidence."

The 49ers were handed its first loss of the Sunday in an 81-42 drubbing by Syracuse. Clark paced the 'Niners with her first career double-double (13 points and 10 rebounds), to go with six blocks.

LBSU will continue its roadswing next weekend aganst Sacramento State at 7:05 p.m. on Saturday.

Soccer

"This [win] is seven and a half years of work," said Ingrassia, who is in his seventh season at the 49er helm. "We've gotten to the tournament before, but this year, we've got the experience. We got players who've been there once and some even twice, and a coaching staff that has been there a third time.

"It would've been very painful to walk out of here and know that we're 0-3 in tournament matches without having scored a goal."

Link delivered the game-winner in the 100th minute with 13 seconds left to play in the first overtime period. Senior midfielder Sidney Garza sent a lob pass from the opposite field to Link, who then dribbled the ball down the left wing before cutting into the box and hitting a right-footed shot that looped around goalkeeper Roxanne Barker.

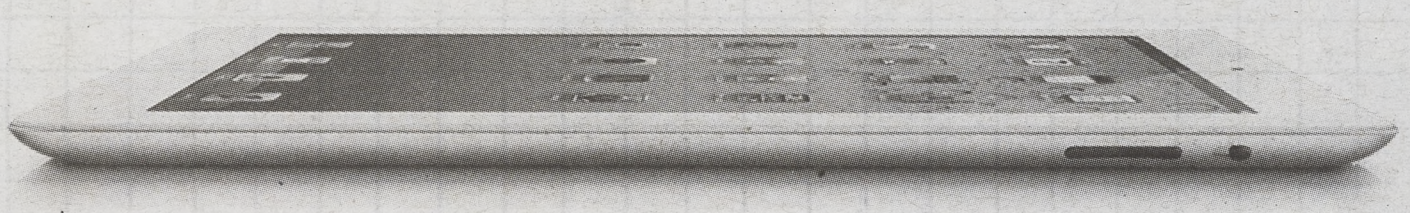

The LBSU reserves and coaching staff cleared the bench immediately after and rushed on to the field to celebrate as tears of joy came streaking down the faces of several players, including Link.

"It went in and I don't remember celebrating," Link said of the goal in between laughs. "I was too busy crying."

LBSU goalkeeper Kaitlyn Gustaves had 12 saves after only 21 the entire season in a match where the 49ers were out-shot, 16-7.

LBSU will take on Miami in the second round of the NCAA Tournament on Friday at UCLA's Drake Stadium at a time to be determined.
